Q.No: 15 Read the passage and answer the following question:

Old age is often described as a period of reflection, wisdom, and sometimes, unexpected emotional turbulence. Many elderly people experience a complex mix of emotions, ranging from contentment and gratitude to loneliness and anxiety. While some find comfort in family bonds and cherished memories, others struggle with feelings of neglect and isolation, especially when their social circle diminishes or their health declines.

Experts suggest that emotional wellbeing in old age largely depends on supportive relationships and a sense of purpose. Engaging in hobbies, maintaining friendships, and feeling valued by younger generations can significantly uplift an elderly person's mood and outlook on life. Sadly, in many societies, older individuals are not given the attention and respect they deserve, which can intensify their feelings of despair. Younger generations should respect older individuals.

It is, therefore, essential for families and communities to acknowledge the emotional needs of the elderly and create an environment where they feel heard, respected, and loved. A society that cares for its older generation ultimately safeguards its own humanity.
